The Political Economy of Patriarchy in the Global South

Routledge (Gender & Economics series), July 2022

This book investigates the impact of theoretical shortcomings upon feminist strategies by engaging with ungendered accounts of capitalist development and theories on gendered oppression and inequality. Turkey offers a case that challenges assumptions and calls for rethinking major feminist categories and theories, thereby shedding light on the dynamics of social change in the global South.

Gender and the Dismal Science: Women in the Early Years of the Economics Profession

Columbia University Press July 2022

Women in the economics profession report pervasive biases that hinder full and equal participation—and these obstacles take an even greater toll on women of color. Blending rich historical detail with extensive empirical data, Ann Mari May examines institutional factors that excluded women in the formative years and sheds new light on why biases against women persist today.

Gender-Responsive Budgeting in Practice

Lexington Books, March, 2022

“Gender-Responsive Budgeting in Practice: Lessons from Nigeria and Selected Developing Countries” examines the use of gender-responsive budgeting (GRB) as a tool for achieving gender equality goals. The book analyzes government budgets, the budgeting process, and gender equality outcomes in Nigeria and other developing countries from 2000 to 2020. The contributors highlight the lack of progress in implementing GRB in developing countries and identify crucial factors that need to be addressed to promote inclusive growth and sustainable development.

The Incentivised University Scientific Revolutions, Policies, Consequences

Springer, January 2022

The book develops a philosophical foundation for analysis of higher education incentives, scientific progress and societal outcomes. It explains how incentivising intellectual and scientific progress is likely to fail, and cause harm, on the dimensions it purports to improve. Feminist contributions, like Longino's, can inform a better approach focused on institutions and the dynamics of knowledge.
